

Declassified in Part - Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2012/06/04 : CIA-RDP90T00114R000600680001-8

25X1

Central Intelligence Agency

DIRECTORATE OF INTELLIGENCE

7 January 1987

Algeria: Growing Challenges For Bendjedid 25X1

Summary

The eight-year-old regime of President Chadli Bendjedid is both internal factionalized and struggling to manage growing public disgruntlement. At the heart of Bendjedid's difficulties is the country's oil-related economic crisis, which has hamstrung government efforts to deal with serious social problems. The economic downturn has aggravated factionalism within the government, party, and military, and has fueled personality clashes and bureaucratic rivalry. The internal debate is a battle over policy, pitting Bendjedid against old guard leftists opposed to the President's economic reforms and opening toward the West. Bendjedid's position appears fairly secure; nevertheless, he is likely to face economic and political difficulties this year of such magnitude that his position will weaken, forcing him to compromise with opponents. As a result, he probably will be less able to promote closer ties with the United States; moreover, expanding US-Moroccan military cooperation and Algiers' diplomatic courtship of Libya also will complicate relations with Washington.

25X1

* * * * * * * *

President Chadli Bendjedid is facing the most serious challenge to his regime since he took office in 1979. The drastic drop in hydrocarbon prices on the international market last spring lead to an economic crisis because of a loss of 50 percent of oil income, according to the US Embassy in Algiers.

This memo	orandum was prej	pared by the Maghreb Bra	anch, Arab-Israe	eli Division,	Office of Near Eastern	and South Asian	n Analysis, Info	ormation as of	7
January 1987	was used in it:	s preparation.	Questions and	d comments should be dia	rected to Chief	, Arab-Israeli I	Division

25X1

25X1

NESA M#87-20001 C

25X1

Cv26 of 42

Declassified in Part - Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2012/06/04: CIA-RDP90T00114R000600680001-8

	·	25X
percent of come from h	nt percent of the country's export receipts, nearly 50 government revenues, and about 25 percent of the GDP hydrocarbons. To deal with the financial shortfalls, ment cut its operation budget, reduced development and expenditures, and slashed imports.	25X1 growth in copulation government believe und inemployment food, water	uently, for the first time since independence, economic 1985 was less than the annual 3 percent increase in . The new round of austerity measures has required the to cut programs addressing social problems. We employment has reached 25 percent in many areas, and nt and underemployment together may exceed 30 percent. r, and housing shortages and their cost also have reasingly burdensome for the rapidly growing . For example, the Embassy says a kilogram of meat now	25X1
Last Novem Constantin occurred i to have st corruption first seri conditions concerned	ic strains seem to have increased social tensions. ber, rioting by students and the unemployed rocked e, the third-largest city, and minor disturbances n other cities including Algiers. The violence appears emmed from poor living conditions and grievances over among government officials. These incidents were the ous outbreaks of violence attributable to economic since Bendjedid took power. The regime also is about the growing assertiveness of Muslim brotherhood dissidents		25X
	Politics: From Consensus to Conflict
the regime ideologues government the needs who claim panacea. collective elements, resources.		25X1 and often military-	nation on power centers within the government is sketchy inconsistent, mainly because the country's tight-knit, civilian oligarchy has cliques that cut across clan and hal lines.
group and Secretary the Alger to reform	the most intense struggle is between the Bendjedid leftists in the FLN and Army, led by Permanent Messaadia, who want to preserve the socialist aspect of ian revolution. They object to the President's efforts the economy by encouraging privitization and local tinitiative. These ideologues also oppose Bendjedid's opening to the United States and favor strengthened	25 X 1

Declassified in Part - Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2012/06/04 : CIA-RDP90T00114R000600680001-8

	ized Copy Approved for Release 2012/06/04 : CIA-RDF	90100114R000600680001-8
6	-	2
Blancah the	ne Soviet Union, Libya, and other radio ese differences are largely concealed f	tow fue bantic.
increasingly national pro	the various sides have carried the di	ispute into the broader segred delayed long morale problem turn, have the Presider promotions, response to hold over the meeting with former Chief guard.	ate within the FLN, moreover, is wident ments of the military. The faltering of sought modernization of the military lems within the officer corps. These estrengthened the hand of those officers of the series activity within some units, and austerity measures has led Bendjedid the military. In late November, follow the senior echelon of the Army, the fof Staff Benloucif and reorganized the senior echelon of the Army, the	and has led to developments, in s critical of officers over d the Army's to reassert his ing a rare President fired he presidential , probably as a preemptiv	e move against potential coup plotters
Benloucif's sympathet ic	we believe Bendjedid acted loucif was attempting to challenge his replacement, General Belhoucet, probato the idea of developing ties with t	authority. bly is less he United States.		25
Prospects f	or Bendjedid
the country danger of l from within coalesce as Benloucif t	judgment, Bendjedid remains first amore's ruling military hierarchy and is not osing his position. The President's the regime or outside the government ainst him. Benjedid demonstrated in hierarchies to hold firm on the need we believe his agenda remains intact.	various opponents have yet to his removal of ht power over the for economic somewhat or challenges economy in senior pers 1986 in limpolicies and any other senior officials of the conficials of the conficial of the confi	neless, Bendjedid's political position wer the past year, and he will face ever unless he comes to grips with the determined our view. For example, the President sonnel shifts in the cabinet and FLN is ne with his effort to revise the count and consolidate power, but he has not be significant changes in nearly a year. Heliver what the US Embassy was told be would be a landmark speech on the econdly November. According to the US Embather to Bendjedid's reforms.	eriorating made several n 1985 and early ry's economic een able to make In addition, he y Algerian omy in Oran ssy, the 17th

Given the strong likelihood of continuing financial austerity, President Bendjedid probably will not be able to make much progress in achieving economic reform. Moreover, he probably will be forced to divert resources from the public sector to the military to placate officers and bolster his tarnished image. We believe austerity probably will encourage the government to continue traditional socialist policies, even though reform probably would alleviate at least some of the economic and social problems. Implications for the United States Algeria's foreign policy probably will become more ambiguous because of the country's political drift. Bendjedid's weaker position and need to balance political factions will result in inconsistent or even contradictory decisions. For the United States, such a course would, in our view, probably mean limited progress in bilateral ties, or even a deteroriation of relations, because of the continuing importance of radicals in the regime. In any event, Algiers will have fewer funds available to purchase military equipment from Washington, and US commercial firms will have fewer business opportunities given economic austerity. In addition, Algerian-US relations with regard to North Africa are likely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military cooperation will complicate ties between Washington and Algiers, even though Algerian officials still hope that the United States will play an intermediary role between Washington and Morocco in ending the war in the Western Sahara. Algerian leaders Continues to develop relations with Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, austerity, President Bendjedid probably will not be able to make much progress in achieving economic reform. Moreover, he probably will be forced to divert resources from the public sector to the military to placate officers and bolster his tarnished image. We believe austerity probably will encourage the government to continue traditional socialist policies, even though reform probably would alleviate at least some of the economic and social problems. Implications for the United States Algeria's foreign policy probably will become more ambiguous because of the country's political drift. Bendjedid's weaker position and need to balance political factions will result in inconsistent or even contradictory decisions. For the United States, such a course would, in our view, probably mean limited progress in bilateral ties, or even a deteroriation of relations, because of the continuing importance of radicals in the regime. In any event, Algiers will have fewer funds available to purchase military equipment from Washington, and US commercial firms will have fewer business opportunities given economic austerity. In addition, Algerian-US relations with regard to North Africa are likely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military cooperation will complicate ties between Washington and Algers, even though Algerian officials still hope that the United States will play an intermediary role between Algeria and Morocco in ending the war in the Western Sahara. Algerian leaders Continues to develop relations with Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationshin. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences, Algeria's foreign policy probably will become more ambiguous because of the country's political drift. Bendjedid's weaker position and need to balance political factions will result in inconsistent or even contradictory decisions. For the United States, such a course would, in our view, probably mean limited progress in bilateral ties, or even a deteroriation of relations, because of the continuing importance of radicals in the regime. In any event, Algiers will have fewer funds available to purchase military equipment from Washington, and US commercial firms will have fewer business opportunities given economic austerity. In addition, Algerian-US relations with regard to North Africa are likely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military cooperation will complicate ties between Washington and Algiers, even though Algerian officials still hope that the United States will play an intermediary role between Algeria and Morocco in ending the war in the Western Sahara. Algerian leaders Continues to develop relations with Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	austerity, P much progres probably wil sector to th tarnished im the governme though refor	resident Bendjedid probably will not be able to make in achieving economic reform. Moreover, he be forced to divert resources from the public military to placate officers and bolster his age. We believe austerity probably will encourage at to continue traditional socialist policies, even more probably would alleviate at least some of the because of the country's political drift. Bendjedia's weaker position and need to balance political factions will result in inconsistent or even contradictory decisions. For the United States, such a course would, in our view, probably mean limited progress in bilateral ties, or even a deteroriation of relations, because of the continuing importance of radicals in the regime. In any event, Algiers will have fewer funds available to purchase military equipment from Washington, and US commercial firms will have fewer business opportunities given economic austerity. In addition, Algerian-US relations with regard to North Africa are likely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military cooperation will complicate ties between Washington and Algiers, even though Algerian officials still hope that the United States will play an intermediary role between Algeria and Morocco in ending the war in the Western Sahara. Algerian leaders Continues to develop relations with Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	Implications	for the United States
Africa are likely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military cooperation will complicate ties between Washington and Algiers, even though Algerian officials still hope that the United States will play an intermediary role between Algeria and Morocco in ending the war in the Western Sahara. Algerian leaders Continues to develop relations with Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	because of toposition and inconsistent States, such progress in because of the In any event military equals	he country's political drift. Bendjedid's weaker need to balance political factions will result in or even contradictory decisions. For the United a course would, in our view, probably mean limited bilateral ties, or even a deteroriation of relation he continuing importance of radicals in the regime. Algiers will have fewer funds available to purchationent from Washington, and US commercial firms will	s, se
Africa are likely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military cooperation will complicate ties between Washington and Algiers, even though Algerian officials still hope that the United States will play an intermediary role between Algeria and Morocco in ending the war in the Western Sahara. Algerian leaders Continues to develop relations with Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,
Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	Africa are cooperation even though will play as	ikely to suffer. Budding US-Moroccan military will complicate ties between Washington and Algiers Algerian officials still hope that the United State intermediary role between Algeria and Morocco in	s, es
Tripoli in ways that belie their claim that they simply want to monitor Libyan political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trip to Libya in early December was his first ever to that country, The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	Algeria	leaders
The travel of Libyan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	monitor Lib	vays that belie their claim that they simply want to van political developments. Bendjedid's sudden trij)) following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences, following the summit, in our view, confirms progress in the relationship. Short of resolving serious bilateral differences,	The travel	of Libvan Foreign Secretary Mansour to Algeria
appease hardliners within his government and dissuade Qadhafi	following trelationshipendiedid p	ne summit, in our view, confirms progress in the confirmation of the confirmation	s,

Declassified in Part - Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2012/06/04 : CIA-RDP90T00114R000600680001-8	25X
SUBJECT: Algeria: Benjedid Faces Challenges
NESA M# 87-30001 C	25X1
DISTRIBUTION:
EXTERNAL:
Copy 1 - Ambassador Robert H. Pelletreau (Pentagon) 2 - Lt. Gen. Leonard Perroots (Pentagon) 3 - Lt. Gen. Dale A. Vesser (Pentagon) 4 - James L. Woods (Pentagon) 5 - Sandra Charles (Pentagon) 6 - Commander Timothy Hartung (Pentagon) 7 - Dennis Ross (NSC) 8 - Arnold Raphel (State Department) 9 - R. Rand Beers (State Department) 10 - Patrick N. Theros (State Department) 11 - Ambassador David E. Zweifel (State Department) 12 - Ambassador Morton I. Abramowitz (State Department) 13 - Richard Solomon (State Department) 14 - US Embassy Rabat, Morocco 15 - US Embassy Algiers, Algeria INTERNAL:
16 - DIR/DCI/DDCI/Exec Staff 17 - DDI 18 - ADDI 19 - NIO/AFR 20 - NIO/NESA 21 - CPAS/ILS 22-27 - CPAS/IMC/CB LOFY 27 Operatoryeo 2-5-87 L.M. 28 - C/PES 29 - PDB Staff 30 - NID Staff 31 - D/NESA 32 - D/NESA 33 - C/PPS/NESA 34-35 - PPS/NESA (One copy to analyst to source) 36 - NESA/IA 37 - NESA/PG 38 - NESA/PG 39 - NESA/AI 40-42 - NESA/AI/M
DDI/NESA/AI/M/ 8 Jan 87	25 X 1
	25 X 1

25X1